Because of environmental concerns, many teens and young adults considering careers in the energy industry are avoiding oil and gas in favor of green energy. Even the American Association of Professional Landmen, which has historically been an oil and gas industry advocacy group, has struggled to redefine itself to embrace professionals engaged in the broader energy industry.

However, each energy source has unique environmental benefits and impacts. Unlike the green energy industry, the oil and gas energy industry has a poor track record with respect to advocating the many benefits and crucial functions it provides to society and with respect to educating the public about the negative environmental impacts of green energy.

What are the benefits and environmental impacts of oil and gas as compared to green energy sources? What can the oil and gas industry do to better engage and educate the public (and especially teens and young adults) about the benefits of oil and gas and the environmental impacts of green energy? Do you expect the talent of younger workers to continue to shift away from oil and gas and toward green energy? Please select one, or more, of the questions herein and explain your thoughts.
